Mineola

Community Profile

History

From the late 17th century to the early 19th century, the Credit River Valley was the exclusive domain of the Mississauga's, a band of the Ojibway. They were nomadic hunters and fishers who travelled the entire length of the Credit River from Lake Ontario to Georgian Bay. In 1805, they relinquished most of their holdings to the British Government, with the exception of a strip of land one mile on each side of the Credit River - the Credit Indian Reserve, which now comprises part of Mineola, as we know it today. As settlement occurred, the Mississaugas sold most of the Credit Indian Reserve to the Crown in 1820.

Following deforestation, the lands in Mineola were used for agriculture up to the 1930s. Growth pressures of Port Credit, together with construction of the Queen Elizabeth Way, including Canada's first "clover leaf" interchange at Hurontario Street, provided the impetus for development. Unlike many other subdivisions in Mississauga, Mineola appears to have been developed by several people in several parcels. Mineola underwent suburban residential development on these parcels of land throughout the 1940s and 1950s, and by 1950 newer homes along with older farmhouses lined Hurontario Street almost continuously from Port Credit to Cooksville.

Since that time, infill development has continued to take place, abetted by the widening of Hurontario Street, and the introduction of GO train service in 1967.

Table 3 - Population by Ethnic Origin (Single Responses)

Ethnic origin refers to the ethnic or cultural origins of a person's ancestors. An ancestor is someone from whom a person is descended and is usually more distant than a grandparent. It is not the same as place of birth, citizenship or nationality. People who responded to more than one category were counted as multiple responses.
